PREFACE

IN making public this Bibliography of Hawthorne the compiler asks pardon for paraphrasing Miles Coverdale's reflection about Zenobia and applying the paraphrase to her work. With all its faults, which may be a great many besides the abundance that she knows of, this Bibliography, she trusts, will possess features of timeliness and usefulness which may at least be valuable while new.

The Bibliography represents work covering some sixteen years. It was begun in 1888 to fulfill a requirement for graduation at the Library School of Columbia College, but it was not presented for a degree until 1891, when the school had been transferred to the University of the State of New York. Thereafter the subject, which had originally been selected because there existed no published Bibliography of Hawthorne, became so fascinating in itself that work upon it has continued to occupy as much of the compiler's time as could be spared to it. The centenary of Hawthorne so widely observed last summer has aroused such interest in all that pertains to Hawthorne that the present has been thought an auspicious time for making available to the public the mass of material so collected.

No work of this kind can be final, but it may be truly said that everything which came within the compiler's ken has been noted, although certain modern unauthorized editions have been omitted here as being of too little value either to collectors or librarians to warrant inclusion. To render the Bibliography a practicable tool in all libraries, small as well as large, the references given in Poole's Index have been included, besides many references to periodical literature not there cited. Many details have also been included that will, it is hoped, make the work of particular value to collectors.

Grateful acknowledgments are here offered to many libraries and librarians from whom aid has been asked and obtained ; to the publishers of Hawthorne's works for data concerning editions ; to the Grolier Club of New York for permission to make use of their Catalogue of First Editions of the Works of Nathaniel Hawthorne for verification of details regarding the outward appearance of some of the first editions ; and especially to Mr. P. K. Foley, who has read the proofs.

EXPLANATIONS

THE descriptive terms used in the Bibliography are those ordinarily found in works of this character, with one exception.

The old fold symbol to indicate the size of a book no longer having its original meaning in showing the real size, the notation of the modern trade bibliographies has been used throughout, as being more useful.

v. 50, pp. 823-839; v. 51, pp. 47-63, 180-195.

Mr. H. E. Scudder says: "In 1858 Hawthorne began to sketch the outline of a romance. He made notes from time to time before he abandoned the project, and these notes are reprinted in the Old Manse Edition under the title of The Ancestral Footstep." It had previously been included in the volume of Sketches and Studies in the Little Classic Edition, and in volume 11 of the Riverside Edition.

CHIEFLY ABOUT WAR MATTERS

CHIEFLY ABOUT WAR MATTERS, by a Peaceable Man.

In Atlantic Monthly, July, 1862, v. 10, pp. 43-61.

"The editor of the magazine objected to sundry paragraphs in the manuscript, and these were cancelled with the consent of the author, who himself supplied all the footnotes that accompanied the article when it was published. One of the suppressed passages, in which President Lincoln is described, was afterwards printed. It occurred first in James T. Fields's Our Whispering Gallery, in the Atlantic, April, 1871, v. 27, pp. 510-512, a series afterwards renamed, when published in book form, Yesterdays with Authors. The suppressed passage is restored to its proper place in v. 17 of the Old Manse Edition." — H. E. Scudder, in v. 17 of the Old Manse Edition. The suppressed passage also appears in v. 12 of the Riverside Edition.

Letters can also be found in the biographies of many of his friends. No attempt has been made to make a record of them here.

THE BIBLIOPHILE SOCIETY has acquired over 200 letters of Hawthorne, most of them written to his wife, dated from the time he was at Bowdoin nearly up to the time of his death. These will probably be printed by the Society.

BIOGRAPHICAL AND CRITICAL SKETCHES

Besides the references here given, much material, both biographical and critical, may be found in the biographies of his friends and associates, — Emerson, Longfellow, Lowell, Thoreau, Whittier, and many others; also in the accounts and histories of Brook Farm. The histories of American literature, too, include matter of greater or less value.
